A NEW CONVERT.

Calgary Herald: "The Democratic party platform pledges a 'material reduction of the tariff on the necessities of life' and the free listing of articles 'production of which is monopolized by trusts.'

"Meat, fish, paper and sugar fall under this free, and the 'instantaneous Canadian manufacturer' cannot help but profit by the 'demolition of the tariff wall.' Other suggestions for the free list are bread, cornmeal, flour, 'nuts, butter, cheese, milk and cream, beans, peas, cabbage' and other vegetables, peas, potatoes, berries and other fresh 'fruits and poultry.' The 'gilded' also that the tariff on all other foodstuffs not of prime necessity be cut in two. Should the Democrats carry their program to the limit, a new and greater market will be opened to the farmers of the Northwest, 'where their surplus stock can be disposed of.'

Well, well! Have not the Herald and its friends been declaring for two solid years that free entry for Canadian farm products into the United States markets would be of no benefit to the Canadian farmer? Yet here is the Herald going into mild rhapsodies at the bare prospect of a new and greater market being opened up to the Canadian farmer by the free listing of some classes of farm products entering those markets and a reduction of the tariff upon other classes. Truly—wonders will never cease.

STORED WHEAT MEANS LOST MONEY.

Government newspapers are making much of the fact that a large amount of grain is being stored in steamers at Fort William, and commend the ministers for facilitating the loading of these boats by keeping the ice-breakers at work. They will perhaps be lauding the ministers next for getting out of bed in the morning. It surely does not denote an unbecoming anxiety to promote the public weal that the ice-breakers are being utilized to enable these vessels to load grain; but much might be expected of any Government and would be done by any Government Canada has had or is ever likely to have. That the grain is being stored in the steamers ready for shipment in spring is, of course, better than that it should have had to remain in the farmers' granary or in the fields. That it is being stored in the steamers is a fact which William does not deny, and that it has been sold for something, and that the farmer has received the proceeds. But that it has to be stored at Fort William also is a fact which William does not deny, and that what the farmer got for it was reduced by the cost of storage and insurance throughout the winter. Had this grain been allowed to go into the United States markets for sale it would now be on its way to the consuming markets of the world, either as wheat or as flour, and the farmer would have in his pocket not only what he has there, but the additional price that could be paid for grain which could have been made use of at once.

There is no money for the farmer in an arrangement which compels the buyer to store grain for six months before shipping it to the British market. The buyer cannot add the cost of the storage charges and the insurance to the selling price of the wheat, because he has to sell the wheat in competition with free wheat from all corners of the world. Necessarily, he takes these incidental charges out of the farmer. It would be better for the farmer, more convenient for the buyer, and could not be worse for the British consumer, if our wheat were allowed free entry to the marketing and milling centres of the United States, and so freed from the loss incidental to a prolonged storage. As there are nineteen million bushels stored in steamers alone, the loss this year through this unnecessary expense will be a very large sum.

SIDE-TRACKING THE NAVAL DEFENCE QUESTION?

That the Turk is a past master in the art of putting off until tomorrow what he is ordered to do today surely needs no further confirmation. For a month the delegates of his victorious enemies have been explaining to him that he has been beaten, and would be again beaten unless he bought peace at their price without delay. At the same time the ambassadors of all Europe have been racking their brains to find something to say that would frighten the Turk into early compliance with the demand. But up to date neither has the Turk bought peace, nor has the re-baiting begun. Instead, he is now calmly holding his National Assembly to convene for the purpose of considering the Balkan situation. For serene calmness the Turk surely has no equal on this planet.

This disinclination to get excited over trifles may be constitutional, but in the present instance there are obvious reasons for it. Procrastination offers the Turk the only ground of hope. Things with him cannot well grow worse, and may in some respects grow better. His enemies are so wealthy, and the cost of maintaining immense armies in the field far from home must be draining their resources.

His enemies are so wealthy, and the cost of maintaining immense armies in the field far from home must be draining their resources. The longer the drain goes on the weaker they will be, and perhaps the more disposed to modify their demands and make an end of the exhaustive business. Delay, too, gives time for the ancient and latent jealousies of the European nations to arise, and with Austria and Russia in antagonism things could be so decidedly brighter for the Porte. While if a general European war could be provoked, he Turk would become the preponderant power of the East.

To Canadians, the Turk and his fortunes have no immediate or personal concern. Aside from the disinterested hope that he will be kicked out of Europe for good, we have no particular interest in the negotiations now afoot; certainly no responsibility for their outcome, but we do have an interest in the position which to every Canadian must be thoroughly and heartily satisfactory. With half a century to people and develop our surpluses may be better employed tending to our own affairs than meddling with those of disjuncts on the other side of the world.

If the plans of our Government carry, however, Canadians will not in future enjoy this freedom from responsibility for the conduct of Europe, Asia, Africa and the Islands of the sea, and all who dwell therein.

Mr. Borden proposes to demand from Great Britain a share in the control of British foreign policy as a condition of Canadian participation in Imperial defence. Just why he proposes to do so he has not made clear. Canadians have hitherto been content to leave the management of the foreign policy in the hands of the British Government, and have stood ready when called upon to back up that policy with Canadian men or money or both. Nor have they at present any want of confidence in either the ability or the honesty of the British statesmen, in whose hands this responsibility rests. Why Mr. Borden should take a different view, and should demand a condition of participation in sea defence measures that we have a voice in the external politics of Turkey and Persia and Siam and Tibet is a secret locked in the Premier's mind. It is not easy to see wherein Canada or the Empire or the world would be the better for our gratuitous assumption of such large and unnecessary responsibilities. On the face of it, the proposal bears the aspect of a want of confidence in Britain, and of a desire to interfere where we have neither need nor business to interfere.

The Premier has been told, however, that his demand cannot be complied with, that the control of foreign affairs must remain in the British Cabinet and British House of Commons, and that all he can have is a representative on the purely advisory Committee of Imperial Defence. He was told so before he made his spectacular offer of dreadnoughts, and also before he announced that a permanent naval policy would not be formulated for some time. He named his condition, therefore, knowing that it would not be complied with. Did he do so as a means of side-tracking indefinitely the question of a permanent defence policy? Is it the understanding between the Premier and the Nationalists that the contribution is the end of naval defence so far as the present Government is concerned?

Remarkd on the Side

If it be true that the unexpected death of the House of Lords will pass the Home Rule bill by acclamation. What odds?

That the plot thickens. The police are busy as to be taught tonight. The ostensible reason is to give assistance to victims, but no right-thinking scepticism will be deceived by such a simple explanation.

A strike on an Irish railroad has brought out the statement that it is chiefly used for freighting potatoes and print paper. Plain living and high thinking?

While Governor Ogle, of Nevada, is minded to put some obstacles in the way of divorce, he sort of evened up matters by advocating law limiting the number of rounds in a prize fight.

The repeated appearance of mysterious airships over the British Isles has given rise to the theory that the "Flying Dutchman" has changed his port of call, and is now appearing in the neighbourhood of the British Isles.

A Medicine Hat paper boldly declares that prayers and hot air will not make a success of the Y.M.C.A. campaign. However, the Y.M.C.A. will probably be quite well pleased if the campaign makes a success of the prayer.

Kaiser Wilhelm is reported to have declared recently in conversation that all the world will be republican within fifty years, and that his son will be the last of the German emperors. The proposal to start a new emperor business in the Balkans is perhaps the cause of Wilhelm's gloomy view.

A teamster working at one of the railway camps down south has started a highly scientific discussion. One morning recently it was discovered that he had taken the neck-rope of his wagon to bed with him, and by way of explanation he declared that he wanted to keep the neck-rope warm would prevent it breaking. There is something in this reasoning, for the neck-rope is a neck-rope that is put to bed and treated with proper care will last a good deal longer than the average teamster.

Estimated Profits From Installing and Operating Burglar Alarm Systems—One Branch Alone of the Alberta Electric Protection Company's Activities.

Estimated number of Banks, Fur Stores and Jewelry Stores in Alberta requiring automatic burglar alarm protection	150
Rate per month for protection services	$30.00
Monthly income to company furnishing services, 150 x $30.00	$4,500
Annual income to company furnishing services, 12 x $4,500	$54,000
Company's operating expenses for the year	$15,000
PROFITS	$39,000
ANNUAL DIVIDEND ON $100,000 CAPITAL	39 PER CENT

SUPPOSE THAT INSTEAD OF THE CONSERVATIVELY ESTIMATED 150, ONLY 75 ALBERTA BANKS AND BUSINESS HOUSES INSTALLED THE BURGLAR ALARM SERVICE, THE DIVIDENDS ON THE STOCK WOULD STILL BE 19½ PER CENT.

ALSO REMEMBER THIS

FIRST—$30 per month for a burglar protection service is the EASTERN rate. Western rates should be higher.

SECOND—One hundred and fifty is an exceedingly low estimate of the number of Alberta business houses requiring burglar protection.

THIRD—The Alberta Electric Protection Company is not supplying burglar alarm protection systems alone. It will meet the constantly increasing demand for private fire alarm systems, sprinkler systems, night watch patrol systems, and a city messenger service with call boxes located in hotels and everywhere throughout the business district.
